federal government is seeking ideas on how to raise education standards in the U.S. In an announcement, the Education Department said it is seeking proposals for ideas that would increase school choice, including efforts that would expand early learning programs. The department said it will award up to $30 million each year for at least three years to the entity that submits the most creative and effective ideas. "As our nation prepares students for college and career, too many are being left behind, especially those who live in communities of color, who are rural, or who are from low-income families," Education Secretary Betsy DeVos said in a statement. "It is imperative that we do more to ensure every student has the opportunity to succeed, no matter where they live." The initiative could cost millions of dollars. Under the law that created the program, the department must award the grant money to a nonprofit with
