Involvement of friends and family in supporting people with dementia is crucial for health and well-being.

However, much of the research to date has focused on the views of formal health care providers or professionals. To overcome this knowledge gap and inform the development of professional practices and policies, the authors sought to understand the experience of people with dementia and their loved ones, and highlight potential areas of agreement in the use of intervention strategies to improve relationships. The research team conducted in-depth interviews with 53 people with dementia, 15 of whom had Alzheimer's disease and 38 of whom had vascular dementia. The results from this study showed that people with dementia and their families did not have a shared vision about relationships and caregiving. The paper also identified areas of agreement between people with dementia and their families and provides evidence for the development of successful intervention strategies and services to support positive relationships between people with dementia and their families. This invention relates to a method of extracting a desired polymeric material from a solid polymer dispersion, for example, a solid polymer dispersion of a polymeric material, which is obtained by polymerizing a polymeric monomer having a molecular weight of from 500 to 2,000 and a water content of from 0.01 to 10 mol %, with an aqueous solution of a polymeric dispersant having a molecular weight of from 50,000 to 1,000,000 and an average degree of polymerization of from 1.5 to 200, said dispersion having particles of the polymeric material in the form of spherical dispersion particles, by an operation in which the aqueous solution is added to said dispersion in an amount of from 0.5 to 1.5 times the volume of the dispersion and the aqueous solution containing the polymeric dispersion is extracted by a decantation or filtration method. As is known, conventional polymerization methods include emulsion polymerization methods, dispersion polymerization methods and suspension polymerization methods. Dispersion polymerization methods include the known method of copolymerizing a monomer, which is emulsified, with a monomer,

The shepherd stood at some distance, not taking his eyes off me. I made no gestures to call him, and did not greet him. Both man and animals... I crouched down to examine the wound. A lump of dirt got stuck in the wound. I pulled it out and threw it aside. The wound, shallow, was covered with dried blood, and fresh blood was still oozing from it, and I realized that there was no bleeding from it yet. When I started to wash the wound with water from the spring, it reopened and began to bleed. "I'll have to cut my clothes to get the bullet," I said. - You can wait while I sew up the wound. "Yes," he replied. - I know what a wound is.
