A credit score means a lot for anyone, and the same is the case with HBCUs. It is a trusted score that can have an impact on a student's financial aid and therefore her future. It's a compilation of various factors like payment history, credit card utilization, the number of opened credit cards and credit utilization ratio that can help determine the risk of an individual to be a defaulter. The only mistake is that it's too expensive to keep good credit score. There are many firms who are claiming to have low cost credit score for HBCUs but they just put the customers at risk. They charge higher prices and put heavier burden on their customers.
