Tremor Espresso and Maxwell House Corp. agreed to pay $16.2 million to settle claims that the former company overcharged retailers on coffee in violation of the False Advertising Act, the Federal Trade Commission announced today. The proposed settlement requires payment of $15 million to consumers who claimed they paid more than they should have for coffee. The settlement also requires payment of a $1.2 million civil penalty to the FTC. The case is being prosecuted by the FTC's Bureau of Consumer Protection. Under the proposed settlement, Maxwell House agreed not to enforce the use of its flavored coffee brand names. The settlement also requires payment of a $25,000 civil penalty to the FTC to resolve FTC's claims that the company violated the False Advertising Act's prohibition against misrepresenting the source of coffee. The proposed settlement provides that all consumers who purchased Maxwell House flavored coffee products between April 1, 2001 and March 29, 2006 can receive a refund or replacement coffee, as long as the consumer submitted a valid proof of purchase. To claim a refund or replacement, consumers must contact Maxwell House at (800) 799-7701. Maxwell House has agreed to provide a toll-free telephone number for consumers to call. The company will also mail each consumer a claim form to fill out and return to the company. Consumers also have the right to file a claim with the court to receive additional compensation. The case is captioned FTC v. Maxwell House Corp., 1:04-cv-10485, U.S. District Court for the District of Minnesota, and will be resolved under the court's administrative procedures for class action settlements. The Commission thanks the staff of the Minnesota Attorney General's Office for their assistance in this matter. With additional enforcement by the FTC and other federal agencies, settlements are now an important part of how the Commission handles thousands of cases each year. For more information about the FTC's efforts to stop deceptive business practices, please visit the FTC's website at www.ftc.gov.
